Narrative of Agriculture's Promise

Agriculture's Promise (Washington Initiative): NYFEA has discovered a bounty of opportunity. From visits to the historically significant and extremely motivational monuments to the discussions with key policy makers at both USDA and in Congress, the attendees have found this to be an extraordinary experience. All organizations with an emphasis group (council, committee, advisory board...) focusing on training and encouraging the next generation are invited to attend. All that is required is a willingness to join in the group policy discussion. It is hosted in Washington DC.

The Agriculture's Next Generation Issues Forum (ANGI Forum) is a collaborative, multiple organization and agribusiness supported discussion where the participating entities share their perspectives. For many of the attendees, this is a unique opportunity to hear from experts who will offer testimony on a select number of current issues. Through the cross-section of participating voices, individuals will grow in their personal understanding and appreciation of the challenge of finding a nationwide consensus. Further, they will come to understand the common-ground that is shared by everyone in the agricultural community. Ideally, they will identify a common understanding of what must be done to promote success in the next generation of agriculture.

USDA and Congressional Leaders Events feature leaders that influence the future of agricultural policy will be available for discussion. Individual participants have the opportunity to hear from and ask questions of leaders that work in policy-setting positions in the Senate and House. Further, executives from USDA will present opportunities and hear from participants as it relates to the Department's work.
